This book is the most thorough, best-known account of the "Philip experiment,"an attempt in 1972 by a number of Canadian intellectuals to conjure up a spirit entirely of their own design. The spirit's name, Philip Aylesford, and backstory (suicide, witchcraft, and betrayal in early 17th-century England) were fabricated by the participants together. They then had a seance to reach this fictional character. Their results were intriguing, begging the question of co-creation, of whether or not ...

Conjuring by Owen - AbeBooks

Philip was unhappily married to a woman named Dorothea and later fell in love with a Romani girl who was accused of witchcraft and burned at the stake. In despair, Philip committed suicide in 1654 at the age of thirty. The group was seated around a table with initial séances yielding no contact, no communication, and no phenomenon. Owen changed test conditions by dimming lights and changing the environment to mimic that of a more "traditional" séance. Participants began ...
