Dekorations Maleri Decorative Painting

Decorative painting - more of a vocation than a career! Taking the high level of decorative painting in the 19th century as my starting point, it is my wish to revive this type of painting. I am more than pleased to offer discerning customers, especially those who attach importance to details, the wide-ranging experience I have gained in this field. With careful attention to detail, I have ...

Decorative stone painting in a bathroom between fractured tiles. In order to lend the stone imitation more variety, a wooden beam with ivy was also painted. The entire painting was carried out with silicate paints. Silicate paints are very convenient for such areas. They are mould-resistant and waterproof. A colourless protective coating is usually not necessary, with the result that the ...

Painting marble or, better yet, marbling - this refers to copying or imitation of different types of marble by painting. Marbling is a glazing technique and, unlike wood painting, it was and is also possible to paint or marble on absorptive surfaces such as distemper or mineral paint. First-class marble paintings executed by a well-trained person bear an uncanny resemblance to genuine marble ...

In the Victorian era, decorative painting moved away from scenes and freehand abstraction. During the Federal and Greek Revival periods in the first half of the 19th century, doors even in fine woods such as mahogany were faux grained, and floor cloths were painted to resemble marble. When Neo-Grec architecture came into fashion in the 1870s, stenciling, polychrome, geometric patterns and ...
