Based on the author's family history, this moving novel shows the bravery and hardship of those who traveled the infamous "Trail of Tears". In 1831, ten-year-old Minko Ushi is part of the forced removal of his Choctaw people from their homeland in Mississippi to Indian Territory. Minko's father decides to travel on ahead by foot, taking Minko and his beloved pony, Black Sp

Longwalker's Journey: A Novel of The Choctaw Trail of ...

The novel begins awkwardly, introducing important facts without integrating them into the flow of the story, and doesn't fill in the details as vividly or with the same immediacy as the first-person narration in Cornelia Cornelissen's recent story of the Trail of Tears, Soft Rain. However, Harrell smoothly introduces Choctaw beliefs and values, which surface in the father and son's treatment of animals, nature and even in their forgiveness of the wagon leader. The character of John Turner, a ...

Along the way, they encounter terrible winter storms, bureaucratic bungling, and racism, as well as occasional, unexpected kindness. Then they must build a house, prepare for planting, and help the survivors recover from the disastrous forced march. As a result of his journey, Minko earns the new name Longwalker. Based on stories from the author's family, this is an exciting survival story. Minko is an appealingly stoic boy, charmingly captured in Meers's black-and-white drawings ...

The novel's main character, a 16-year-old boy from the town of Pownal, Maine. He has "straw-colored" hair and is a tall, well-built boy. He knows how to cook, dance, and knit and never did any sort of sports before the Walk. His motivation for participating in the Walk is not as explicit as McVries or Baker and is very much up for interpretation. He is shown to be naïve but has a strong will ...
