The presentations interweave the neurological examination with neuroanatomy, laying the foundation for clinical problem solving by first, establishing the anatomical concept; second, demonstrating the problem solving method; then third, allowing active participation in applying the method. Anatomy and pathology of the nervous system is understood by directly visualizing it. This is best accomplished by handling the brain (or model of the brain as the case may be) and dissecting or taking it ...

Neuroanatomy and the Neurological Exam. Localization of function is the concept that circumscribed locations are responsible for specific functions. The neurological exam highlights this relationship. For example, the cognitive functions that are assessed in the mental status exam are based on functions in the cerebrum, mostly in the cerebral cortex. Several of the subtests examine language function. Deficits in neurological function uncovered by these examinations usually point to damage to ...
