"Snake Hunting the Carolina Tin Fields" explores every facet of tin and its appeal to snakes. It is far more than a "how-to" book, as the author draws upon 25 years of snake hunting, and relates dozens of experiences with serpents in the Carolinas. Told with humor and often poking fun at himself and his companions, this book will appeal to amateur and professional herpetologists alike. This book helps fill the need for more snake hunting adventures in the Southeast as described ...

CiNi - Snake hunting the Carolina tin fields

The steamy, mosquito-ridden swamps of South Carolina literally crawled with reptiles and were a favoured early haunt for Raymond Ditmars. Packing a luggage of canvas bags, fine soft copper wire for noosing and an abundance of quinine, the snake hunters would head south to Savannah, Georgia, aboard one of many steamers then plying the eastern coast before completing the trip by wagon.

I credit the term to John W. Kemnitzer Jr., coining it in his 2004 book Snake Hunting the Carolina Tin Fields. He means places where old metal roofing, siding and signage have fallen or blown down from their former places of installation and now adorn the ground slowly rusting. 'Tin' is actually galvanized steel (mostly), so it lasts for years out in the elements. It heats up very quickly on sunny days, making it irresistibly attractive to snakes to lay under in relative safety until warm ...

Big Copperhead Snake Hunting - Flipping Tin SC Lowcountry ...

Snake hunters descended on the area each spring. In addition to the hunt club land itself, they found fertile hunting grounds around dilapidated buildings. Tin sheets from the roofs of old farm houses and barns were scattered about on the edges of fields. It truly was a snake hunter's paradise. But, as the old saying goes, all good things must come to an end. The local people (gritty home spun southerners) grew tired of out-of-towners (many of which qualified as "yankees" as their locality ...

Always a gamble that time of year, especially North Carolina, you should do better in lower South Carolina at that time as the other poster mentioned. I have done well in the last 2 wks of March if the weather was steady and growing, but also been skunked if a cold front dropped in for very long. Some years it was to hot by mid April to have success flipping, other years it was still to cool ...
