Molière in the Park and FIAF, after the success of virtual productions of The Misanthrope and Tartuffe, co-present a radically inventive and refreshing take on the classic play, The School For Wives. At its core, Molière's biting 17th-century satire about a privileged and misguided man so intimidated by women that he grooms his own ward for ...

The School For Wives, at its core, is about gender power dynamics. We are looking forward to telling this classic 17th century French tale through the lens of a contemporary aesthetic and an all female, primarily non-white cast to further bring into focus the inherent power of justice and equality over racism and sexism. Furthermore, by casting a Black woman in the central role of ARNOLPHE - a white man of power and privilege, who is forced to realize that he cannot control or snuff out ...

The School for Wives, comedy in five acts by Molière, performed in 1662 and published in 1663 as L'École des femmes. The School for Wives presents a pedant, Arnolphe, so frightened of women that he decides to marry his ward, Agnès, a girl entirely unacquainted with the ways of the world. The delicate portrayal in Agnès of an awakening temperament, all the stronger for its absence of convention, is a marvel of comedy, as are Arnolphe's clumsy attempts at lover's talk. Meanwhile, a ...

The School for Wives ACT I 4. Chrysalde. Most people find it hard to fall in with it; I even yet see letters addressed -- Arnolphe. I endure it easily from those who are not informed; but you -- Chrysalde. Be it so; we will make no difficulty about that; I will take care to accustom my lips to call you nothing else than M. de la Souche. Arnolphe. Farewell. I am going to knock here, to ...
